A Neo-Constructivist Exposition
Constructivism in art was created by a group of Russian artists in the first half of the 20th century. Their art featured abstract forms, geometric shapes and bold colours to represent the modernisation and mechanisation of society. Neo-Constructivists Mila Grigoriev and Peter Garnick similarly draw inspiration from the modern, man-made environment. Grigoriev through painting and Garnick through photography employ the same vocabulary of Constructivist gestures to represent and react to their 21st century surroundings. Action-Reflection is an artistic collaboration in the true spirit of the original Constructivists that sees Grigoriev and Garnick interpreting the same set of industrial landscapes through their respective media.
